Kyrie Irving is ready for his close-up

"Uncle Drew" opens in theaters June 29. QUANTRELL D.COLBERT/LIONSGATE

The Celtics star opens up about making "Uncle Drew," being an "old soul" and why playing in Boston "felt right."

MATT JUUL
matthew.juul@metro.us

Considering he already has seven seasons, five All-Star Game selections, an Olympic gold medal and an NBA championship under his belt, it's easy to forget that Kyrie Irving is only 26 years old. While the young Celtics guard is still making his mark on the sport, he's also getting ready to conquer a new frontier in Hollywood, starting with his big-screen debut in "Uncle Drew."

Thanks to his dedication to the craft, Irving has seamlessly made the move from the court to the film set, and now joins the pantheon of basketball legends who've gone on to find success as both an athlete and an actor. In particular, Irving's ability to transition from comedy to drama impressed his "Uncle Drew" co-stars like Lil Rel Howery, who couldn't help but praise the baller for his acting chops.

"Kyrie, just as an actor, is really good," Howery tells Metro. "He's actually extremely talented, which makes you feel bad because whenever he gets time off, he can just come and do my job, but I can't show up at the Garden [and do his]."

Irving's skills in front of the camera have improved immensely since he first tried his hand at acting during a high school production of "High School Musical." The Celtics star revealed to Metro that he wanted to perform in the play as a way to help him overcome his fear of public speaking.

"I had a terrible, terrible anxiety," Irving says. "I was like, if I could sing in front of people and deliver these lines and emotionally be connected, then it was something I will recover from."

Aside from helping him break out of his shell, the world of entertainment has always played a big role in Irving's life. Whether he's chatting about finding inspiration in Spike Lee's "He Got Game" or having a laugh over his obsession with the sitcom "Friends" — he has the show's logo tattooed on his arm and loves Joey (played by Newton's own Matt LeBlanc), but thinks "Ross is cool too" — you can hear in his voice the passion he has for show business.

"I love seeing art just coming to life," Irving says.

Although "Uncle Drew" is rooted in comedy, surprisingly, the film is filled with poignant scenes between the titular character and his fellow elderly teammates as they try to rekindle their broken friendships. Irving admits that he was able to find deeper connections with his character in those more realistic and dramatic moments.

"I have a really old soul to begin with. It made sense to just have this character come to life in a way that I felt like I wanted to convey of who I want to be when I'm older," Irving says. "In the film, they were fully accepting of my personality and the mistakes that I made, but I hadn't forgiven myself, and I think that holds true sometimes in the real world, as well, and in my life too. Certain mistakes that have happened, you just got to forgive yourself over that."

What started as a small, fun part in a viral Pepsi Max short film has blossomed into a career-changing role for Irving, and he couldn't be happier with his journey as Uncle Drew.

"It started as just a series, and then it was a commercial and then it turned out to be a movie," Irving says. "Now you kind of see it all just come together as one really nice project that I'm so proud to be a part of."

As for what's next for the baller-turned-actor, Irving has a lot of interests he'd like to pursue, including starting a TV network. He's also down for a "Space Jam" reboot, but he'll "have to talk to Michael Jordan first" to get his blessing.

For now, Irving is just trying to find the right balance between his various passions and basketball.

"I have so many passions and interests. Right now, it's just figuring out, like, how do I direct them in the way I want to," Irving says. "Whether that's TV, whether that's content creating, whether that's fashion, I literally have a knack for doing some of these things. I don't necessarily believe in being the face of it, but I love having a hand in it."

"I don't need everyone to know what I'm doing with everything that gets released, and I love it that way," he adds. "I just show appreciation to the team that I have around me, my friends and how much I learn from the culture and how much it affects me and influences me to be who I am."

As for his future with the Celtics, it's unclear whether Irving will remain with the team after next season. However, he does have a lot of love for the Hub, especially since his parents met while attending Boston University.

"I felt that, before I even got here, there was an excitement," Irving says. "There was a great, great, great energy that I felt. As soon as I put that number 11 jersey on, it felt like it was home. I have been waiting for this opportunity to wear number 11 for Boston. My dad and my mom, these are the connections I have to the city. I wouldn't be here without them meeting here, so it just made sense. It felt right."

3 Questions with Pedro Martinez

The Red Sox legend's charity food fest returns this weekend. MATT JUUL

Fans will get a chance to "Feast with 45" at Fenway Park when Pedro Martinez's charity food fest returns on Friday night.

Mayor Marty Walsh, former Red Sox greats Jason Varitek and Tim Wakefield, and others will join Martinez and his wife, Carolina, at Friday night's festivities, which will feature bites from dozens of the Boston area's top chefs. The Hall of Fame pitcher seems pretty pumped about this weekend's event, especially since proceeds will go to benefit the Pedro Martinez Charity, which helps families and kids in the Dominican Republic and the U.S.

"The best part of it is the fact that we can actually offer opportunities for people that are less fortunate," Martinez tells Metro. "We open doors for people to become better humans, better students, better society, so that's the most important part."

Ahead, the Boston sports icon gives us a peek at what else to expect at this year's feast, his thoughts on the renewed Red Sox-Yankees rivalry and more.

Have any fun surprises in store for this year's Feast with 45?

You just never know, because we're going to be mingling with the fans. It's just going be totally off of our hands what people might come up with. I think it's going to be a lot of fun. Having the opportunity to have the chefs cooking different meals — 45 chefs, 45 different meals. It's a great opportunity to mingle with the people. I feel like having dinner with the people in Boston, for me, it's so interesting because they saw me pitch for so many years here.

Do you have any favorite, go-to restaurants in Boston?

I'm spoiled because I have Nick [Calias], who's like my brother as a chef. He cooks for me. But sometimes, we do take a little time together to go and taste the different restaurants. We go to Abe & Louie's, we go to Morton's, we go to Sorellina — anywhere around here. We go to so many places.

What are your thoughts on the renewed rivalry between the Red Sox and the Yankees?

I'm extremely excited about this team, and the rivalry is only going to get better because the Yankees have a young nucleus of good players and so do we. I can't wait to see how this is going to develop because these two teams are on pace to win 100 games. One of them is going to take the flag and the other one is going to have to go play a wild card game. It would be really bad if the team that wins 100 games ends up losing to a wild card team. It's really interesting, but I think it's going to keep everything exciting for the fans, exciting for all of us that are watching from the outside. It's still bad I can't compete in it, because now I have been eager to go out there and compete.

The Fourth of July fun kicks off this weekend.

Boston's history and heritage will be on full display when Boston Harborfest 2018, the largest Fourth of July festival in the country, returns for its 37th anniversary this weekend. Walk the Freedom Trail, see historical reenactments and purchase themed artwork to ring in Independence Day. Dusty Rhodes, president of Conventures, which produces Harborfest, says she expects more than 10,000 people to attend the holiday events over the course of the weekend. Here are five reasons why you don't want to miss Boston Harborfest 2018.

Join Mayor Walsh to kick off the festival
To mark the start of Boston Harborfest 2018, Mayor Marty Walsh will cut an official Harborfest cake as the United States Navy Band and the Northeast Ceremonial Band entertain the crowd. Mayor Walsh will cut the ceremonial cake with a cutlass.
Thursday, June 28, 9:30 a.m., Faneuil Hall, 4 S. Market St.

Watch fireworks illuminate the Boston shoreline
Enjoy live roots music from the Somerville-based Squeezebox Stompers and the Sweet Harmony performance troupe before a display of fireworks lights up the sky above Boston Harbor. No ticket is required to see these brilliant colors on the Esplanade. And though watching the fireworks off of Long Wharf with thousands of other Harborfest attendees sounds like fun, you can check them out from any shoreline from Charlestown to the Seaport and East Boston.
Saturday, June 30, 9 p.m.-9:30 p.m., Boston Harbor off of Long Wharf

Take in all that Boston's art scene has to offer
Artists Crossing, a Boston-based former gallery and curating collective, partnered with the organizers of Harborfest to put together "Art in the Park," an art show with nautical works by 18 Boston-area artists accompanied by live performing artists all day long.
Sunday, July 1, 11 a.m.-7 p.m., Christopher Columbus Park

Participate in fun Freedom Trail tours and events
You can walk the historic Freedom Trail any day of the year, but around the Fourth, Bostonians and visitors alike are all looking to get a deeper sense of the city's and country's history. "Walk Into History" tours highlight the area's revolutionary background. More daily North End tours will take you through Boston's oldest neighborhood, where you can see Old North Church, the starting point for Paul Revere's Ride. Take a free tour focusing on the art and architecture or revolutionary history of the King's Chapel. Return to the neighborhood later for a historic pub crawl, taking you to four 18th-century watering holes around the city that fomented Revolutionary spirit.
Various times, various locations

Join the Independence Day Turnaround Ceremony
Take part in the City of Boston's official Independence Day celebration, complete with a flag-raising ceremony and subsequent march to the Granary Burying Ground to commemorate lives lost in the Revolutionary War. You'll get to show reverence to patriots buried there, such as Paul Revere and John Hancock.

The women of "GLOW" are ready to enter the ring again for season 2. NETFLIX

Rebekka Johnson on 'GLOW' season 2's #MeToo arrival

The hit Netflix series returns for another round this weekend.

ANDREW HUSBAND

When the first season of "GLOW" premiered last summer, the Netflix series fictionalizing the birth of an actual all-female wrestling show quickly became a favorite among critics and viewers. Alison Brie, Betty Gilpin and Marc Maron led the largely female cast through 10 episodes that juggled comedy, drama and the theatrics of wrestling with great success, and now they're back.

Ahead of the second season premiere, we spoke with Rebekka Johnson, who, along with frequent collaborator Kimmy Gatewood, plays half of the wrestling tag team the Beantown Biddies.

Johnson's Dawn Rivecca and Gatewood's Stacey Beswick are two of the series' highlights, largely due to the writing of showrunners Liz Flahive and Carly Mensch. Yet the pair's sketch comedy background, which played a huge role in the duo's creation, is just as effective. Which is why they were able to put their improv skills to good use again in season 2.

"They definitely took our sketch background into account for season 2," she says. "You'll get to see us play more than just the Beantown Biddies. They gave us a lot of leeway with these other characters that we get to play. They're revealed pretty early in the season, but it was really exciting for Kimmy and I to get to figure out new characters."

Wrestling and comedy notwithstanding, "GLOW" is also very much a show of the current #MeToo zeitgeist in Hollywood. Yes, the first season preceded the publicized allegations against Harvey Weinstein and Louis C.K., but the show itself is about women struggling in the entertainment industry during the '80s. Season 1 is chock-full of storylines reminiscent of the current moment, and season 2 will have even more of them.

Rebekka Johnson
MANDEE JOHNSON

"'GLOW' is addressing the problem in its own way. The #MeToo and #TimesUp movements didn't invent the problem. They're just shining a light on it so that we can hopefully make it stop," Johnson explains. "While we were shooting the first season, and when they were writing it, the movement was underground. It wasn't named yet."

Johnson notes that "there's been a shift in America, when it comes to discussing sexual assault and sexual harassment." Primarily because the people who have experienced, or are still experiencing, assault or harassment "are coming out and talking about what they've experienced."

"'GLOW' is just part of that movement," she says, and she's totally correct. New series like AMC's "Dietland" are also a part of these movements in the industry. Even so, that "GLOW" exists now is a testament to what's happening. For not only is the cast principally comprised of women, but so too is the creative team.

"It's such an inspirational place to work," says Johnson. "It's so awesome how many women are a part of this process, both behind and in front of the camera. It really makes for a safe environment."

"GLOW" season 2 premieres Friday, June 29, on Netflix.

the GRUMBLE

Pat King
Grumble Editor

Greetings, Grumblers! It's Thursday, so it is officially time to announce our Grumble of the week, which will earn a $25 gift card from Amazon Prime. This week's winner is Jane S., for her Grumble on how people should be more conscious of the waste they are putting out in the world. Powerful stuff, Jane!

READER WRITE-INS:

PUBLIC TRANSIT IS NOT YOUR HOME!

My Grumble is about people, mostly adult or youth males, on trains and buses.

They take up two seats by stretching out, propping up their dirty feet on the seat next to them or they put a bag on the seat.

... And who wants to sit where the bottom of someone's nasty feet treaded, anyway. Yuck!

Let a lady ... or anyone sit down! They're acting like they were raised by wolves. Maybe they were.

Also the Refusers to Use Earplugs People need to face it. They are the only people in the world proud of their own playlist at 7:30 a.m. ... or anytime. Spare us. Please!!! Thank you.

C'mon!
ISTOCK

LINES AND THE PEOPLE IN THEM???

Before I get in a line, I pull out my charge card, MTA pass or whatever I'm going to use, ID for the "discount" drugstore, etc. I am hoping to make things fast for everybody concerned.

So I am always amazed when the person waiting in front of me sighs loudly and shuffles their weight from side to side and shows how absolutely upset they are waiting in line and huffs and puffs his or her annoyance, then gets up to the self-checkout system. They will be speedy, I'm sure.

So when that person who has been so put off by our fellow Americans, gets up to the machine and only then remembers to look for his or her store ID and/or charge card or even the cash they are going to pay with, my mouth falls open. This person had been in line sighing for several minutes. I'm thinking, "Why would someone spend all that time in line and not get prepared? What is he or she thinking (or what is he or she not thinking)?? And why huff and puff at the people in front of you and do the same yourself???"

Taurus You'll have ample opportunity to present and promote what you want to pursue. The individuals you meet and the places you visit will offer inspiration and positive feedback.

Gemini Physical improvements can be successfully made. Fixing up your surroundings or updating your look will result in greater confidence and compliments from someone special.

Cancer Firm up an agreement you have with someone. Holding up your side of an arrangement will push others to follow suit. Take nothing for granted and leave little leeway.

Leo Aggressive behavior will not be in your best interest. Use your energy wisely and get the grunt work out of the way first if you want to avoid complaints or interference.

Virgo Initiate your plans. Don't be shy or afraid to take a step into the limelight. You've got what it takes to turn an idea into a reality.

Libra Only take on what you can handle. You'll be faced with demanding, critical people if you make unrealistic promises. Avoid indulgent people and excessive spending.

Scorpio Use your intelligence and make solid plans with like-minded people. Avoid conflict and people who tend to be bad influences. Put anger aside and direct your energy into achieving positive results.

Sagittarius Look inward and consider what you can do to improve your skills, image or lifestyle. Evaluate your relationships and back away from people who bring out the worst in you.

Capricorn Discipline and carefully considered plans will help you avoid making a costly mistake. Walk away from unpredictable situations and people. Focus on maintaining a good reputation and positive results.

Aquarius Being aggressive will backfire on you. You are best off biding your time, being patient and avoiding an altercation that could ruin your plans. Self-control is recommended.

Pisces Take control of any situation that can affect your reputation, status or relationships with important people. A change will lead to positive ideas and plans. EUGENIA LAST

State troopers arrested, charged with theft of funds

Three officers are suspected of falsified overtime hours while not on duty.

Current and former state police officials already under scrutiny internally for payroll discrepancies are now fully within the sights of federal prosecutors, who on Wednesday announced charges against two troopers, one of whom is retired, and a former lieutenant.

The three are suspected of fraudulently obtaining more than $10,000 apiece in 2016 for claiming to have worked overtime hours when they were not actually on duty patrolling the Massachusetts Turnpike, according to U.S. Attorney Andrew Lelling.

"Allegations like this where you could have widespread, systemic corruption — in some ways petty corruption; it's not showing up for a shift or lying about having worked it — I think you need somebody to look at that, because that kind of rot tends to spread," Lelling told reporters at a press conference Wednesday morning, hours before the initial appearance by the three suspects. "And in a law enforcement agency, you need its members to be working at the highest level all the time."

Shortly after sunrise on Wednesday, agents from the FBI and the U.S. Department of Transportation Office of the Inspector General arrested the three suspects at their homes without incident, said FBI Special Agent in Charge Harold Shaw.

Former Lt. David Wilson, 57, of Charlton, was paid $12,450 in overtime hours that he allegedly did not work; Trooper Gary Herman, 45, of Chester, was paid $12,468 for overtime he did not work; and former Trooper Paul Cesan, 50, of Southwick was paid $29,000 for overtime shifts he did not work, according to federal authorities. The three are charged with theft of government funds, which carries a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison, three years of supervised release and a fine of $250,000 or two times the total gain or loss, according to federal prosecutors.

Cesan and Herman worked out of the Westfield Barracks, and Wilson worked out of the Charlton Barracks.

To cover up the fact that they weren't on duty, the suspects allegedly altered tickets that had been previously issued and wrote up completely fabricated tickets but it doesn't appear as though any motorists were harmed by citations for phony traffic violations because those fake tickets didn't make it to the Registry of Motor Vehicles, according to Lelling.

The three are suspected of fraudulently obtaining more than $10,000 apiece in 2016 for claiming to have worked overtime hours when they were not actually on duty patrolling the Massachusetts Turnpike.

"Because the citation was not actually issued to a motorist, that citation can't then go to the RMV," where it would eventually become known that even though a citation was issued, the motorist was not stopped, Lelling told reporters. He said, "It does not seem that any motorist got a ticket they were not supposed to get. It's that the state police record-keeping system reflects that tickets were written when, in fact, they were not, as a way of covering up the fact that the trooper had not worked that shift."

In one example, Wilson submitted a carbon copy of a citation for a man supposedly caught driving 54 miles per hour in a 35-mile-per-hour zone resulting in a $140 fine, but the "ghost" ticket was never submitted to the RMV and never appeared on the man's driving record, according to the complaint.

As a result of the alleged fraud, the three suspects took home pay they did not earn and the public was denied the public safety benefits of police patrolling for dangerous drivers and other policing on the Massachusetts Turnpike, according to Lelling.

In March, State Police Col. Kerry Gilpin announced the results of an audit that found discrepancies between payroll records and work actually performed by employees, and said 19 members of the force would face hearings. Nine of them swiftly retired and another nine were suspended without pay.

The federal criminal investigation has so far covered the year 2016 and shifts worked on the Accident and Injury Reduction Effort (AIRE) program and the X-Team initiative by Troop E, which was assigned to patrol the turnpike and has since been absorbed into regional troops.

The alleged payroll fraud's total cost to taxpayers will depend on how widespread it was, according to Lelling.

"It could be a systemic problem in the state police," said Lelling, who told reporters the investigation would continue. He said, "I think it would be a mistake to tar all troopers with this kind of conduct."

Shaw thanked Gilpin for her "commitment to rooting out corruption," and Lelling said, "I do think the state police is now committed to fixing this problem."

After investigating payroll abuses, Gilpin referred her findings to the attorney general's office, according to the administration.

"As part of the ongoing implementation of our wide-ranging reforms, we continue to audit overtime payments received by department members, and to provide the results of those audits to prosecutors for their review for potential criminality," Gilpin said in a statement. "We fully support and will continue to cooperate with the ongoing investigations being conducted by the U.S. Attorney and the Attorney General."

MBTA commuter rail trains to accept credit card payments on board

The new technology will be coming this fall.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Commuter rail riders will soon have another way to pay their fares on board.

Beginning this fall, passengers will be able to pay their commuter rail fare on board with a credit or debit card, the MBTA announced Wednesday.

This is a first for the commuter rail network, according to Keolis, the MBTA's commuter rail operator. The new mobile point-of-sale system (like Square and LevelUp, POS systems are smartphones or tablets that perform transactions) will be expanded over the next two months to all conductors.

"This upgrade gives our customers an additional, convenient way to pay fares, and gives conductors another way to sell onboard tickets that is easier and simpler than using cash and counting change," said MBTA General Manager Luis Manuel Ramírez in a statement. "As we plan for the future of fare collection that is fully integrated across all modes, this new technology shows that we'll continue to look for improvements under the existing system."

Here's how you'll be able to pay your commuter rail fare on board: Conductors will have an app on their already existing company-issued smartphones, as well as a Bluetooth printer. Using the mobile app, the conductor will select the station-to-station info in order to calculate the commuter rail zone and fare, and then process the transaction.

MBTA commuter rail riders will soon have a new way to pay their fare. NICOLAUS CZARNECKI / METRO

This onboard credit or debit card option to pay doesn't replace the other ways to pay your commuter rail fare. Passengers can still buy tickets on board with cash or the mTicket app, or before boarding at a ticket vending machine or ticket office.

"This is a feature our passengers requested, and we're pleased so far with the rollout of the technology," said David Scorey, Keolis CEO, in a statement. "It's just as fast as processing alternative payment options on board trains, it offers a new feature for our passengers and it provides us with more detailed ridership data."

Belfast at night. TOURISM IRELAND

There has never been a better time to discover Belfast

Experience the warmth of an Irish welcome when visiting Northern Ireland.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Titanic Belfast. CHRIS HILL

They say that the "warmth of an Irish welcome" stays with you long after you visit. But as great as the people really are on this tremendously friendly island, it's the charm of Northern Ireland that will be kept in your memory for a lifetime. For example, Lonely Planet — the largest travel guide publisher in the world — recently named Northern Ireland's capital city, Belfast, and the Causeway Coast as 2018's No. 1 Region in the World to Visit. Here are some of the amazing must-sees to enjoy on your next trip to Belfast and the Causeway Coast.

The highlights of Belfast

Did you know that the legendary ship Titanic was built in Belfast? That's right, and visitors of Titanic Belfast — the world's largest Titanic visitor experience — can get up close and personal with where the historic ship was built and walk the same White Star Vessel decks that the original passengers did all those years ago. This immersive exhibit was named the World's Leading Tourist Attraction by the 2016 World Travel Awards and is definitely a can't-miss destination on your trip to Belfast.

For those looking to learn more about Belfast's fascinating history, be sure to book a Black Cab or Black Taxi tour. Take in the city's many historic sites, including the famous political murals, and stop off at destinations like the gorgeous Cathedral Quarter, home to the Metropolitan Arts Centre (MAC), where you can discover extraordinary exhibits from cutting-edge artists and innovative plays and stage productions all year long.

Conveniently located in the heart of the city and less than a mile from the MAC is City Hall. With its breathtaking architecture and interior, this iconic building is something that really needs to be seen to be believed. Tours of the grounds and the building can be booked all week long. A 13-minute cab ride will get you to Belfast's beautiful Botanic Gardens. Guests of the Botanic Gardens will be able to gaze upon the plant life collected within the grounds and greenhouse, as well as travel through the garden's famous Tropical Ravine. Just a stone's throw from the Botanic Gardens lies the prestigious Queen's University. Established in 1895, the building's stunning red-brick architecture and magnolia trees make the university a sight to behold.

Belfast's amazing castles

What would a trip to Northern Ireland be without visiting some of its amazing castles? About seven miles away from the Botanic Gardens is Belfast Castle Estate, where guests can tour the estate's manicured gardens and take in the incredible views of the city below. For more castle adventures, you can travel eight miles north along the eastern coast to Carrickfergus Castle. This 800-year-old castle played an important military role in Irish history as it was used to fend off attacking ships from the Scottish, English and French. Today, it remains one of the most well-preserved, medieval military posts on the island.

Celebrate with Belfast's year-round festivals

The city of Belfast is bustling year-round with festivals celebrating the best of Northern Ireland's music, food, arts and culture. For those looking to travel this October, there's no better time to check out the city than when it comes alive for the annual Belfast International Arts Festival, which runs from Oct. 16 to Nov. 4. This sprawling festival will take over different venues all over the city with an eclectic variety of performances and exhibitions across theater, dance, film and digital arts projects. Highlights from this year's lineup include performances by African singer Angélique Kidjo and folk and blues legend Eric Bibb.

There's never been a better time to discover Northern Ireland. Book direct flights to Belfast from New York's Stewart International Airport and Providence/Boston for as little as $115* one way. Learn more at Ireland.com/Belfast.

Time to get out of the heat.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

For many, summer is a welcome invitation to take it easy and enjoy the rejuvenating powers of the sun's rays. For others, summer is a 93-day-long blisteringly hot thunderdome of a season when the limits of your sanity are tested with each waking hour. Escaping the warm weather is key to survival — otherwise you would find yourself throwing things in your bedroom like Martin Sheen in the beginning of "Apocalypse Now." It's hard to fathom that people who enjoy summer will take trips to beach locations even hotter than where they live. But where can you go if you want to get away from the heat? Here are some great destinations for people who hate summer.

St. John's, Newfoundland
If you want to really get away from the heat, you should head as far north as possible. Have you ever considered taking the pilgrimage up to the Canadian city of St. John's, Newfoundland? This temperate city is surrounded by the Atlantic Ocean and is a prime location to book a spot on the many whale watching tours that operate along its coasts. While back on land, you can enjoy the cool and colorful architecture and renowned fresh seafood. Plus, with the city's average summer temperature resting around 61 degrees, you won't have to worry about sweating through your shirt during your trip.

Portland, Maine
A little south, on the American side of the continent, is the hip town of Portland, Maine. This city has become less of a best-kept secret and is now considered one of the best cities in the country for foodies. This is in part because Maine is ground zero for anyone who loves lobster — and Portland institutions like Bull Feeney's have you covered in this department. With the restaurant's Irish pub vibe and hefty portions, why would you need to worry about melting out in the cruel sun? Not that you would, as the average temperature in Portland is a manageable 76 degrees all summer long.

San Francisco
Over on the West Coast, San Francisco is a perfect option for people who enjoy a more moderate climate year-round. You can walk the hilly streets of the city into its famous Golden Gate Park, eat freshly caught seafood at the legendary Fisherman's Wharf or book a guided tour of the country's most infamous prison, Alcatraz. The average summer temperature of San Francisco never really cracks 70 degrees, so you can enjoy your trip all within the comfort of a jean jacket.

Anchorage, Alaska
Up in America's most northern territory is Anchorage, Alaska. This vibrant city maintains a low average temperature of 69 degrees all summer long, so you can rest assured that you won't be sweating out your body weight on your trip. While visiting Anchorage, you can book a helicopter tour to view from above and land on top of the glaciers that lie just north of the city. Could you ask for a better way to cool down this summer?

Weekend's best bet

SATURDAY marks the start of the single-elimination Round of 16 at the 2018 World Cup. Uruguay and Portugal take to the pitch at 2 p.m. EST, and while the two seem evenly matched on paper, one squad holds a significant advantage going into this winner-take-all affair.

Ronaldo and Portugal will take on Uruguay on Saturday. GETTY IMAGES

Uruguay dominated Group A, as it became the first team since the 1998 Argentina national team to win all three group matches without surrendering a single goal. The team made a mockery of host nation Russia in its most recent match, winning 3-0 while dominating the flow of play. Uruguay had 58 percent of the possession and recorded 16 shots compared with Russia's three. Numbers like that have been the norm for "La Celeste," which has connected on over 84 percent of its passes during the tournament.

Meanwhile, Portugal has struggled to maintain control of the ball for the majority of the World Cup. Though they played keep-away from Iran on Monday, Cristiano Ronaldo and company were outpossessed considerably by Spain in their opening match (66 percent) before conceding that advantage to a lesser degree (55 percent) against Morocco. They have also allowed their fair share of corner kicks, 13 in all and 12 in their first two matches, and that spells trouble for them as all five of Uruguay's goals to this point have come off set pieces.

Oddsmakers seem to be impressed with Uruguay's World Cup performance, as the team was installed as tepid favorites on the goal line and three-way lines despite being ordered 10 spots below No. 4 Portugal in the FIFA rankings. Consensus lines have La Celeste winning in regulation at +175 (meaning a $100 wager would return a $175 profit) and Portugal at +185, while a draw after 90 minutes is listed at +195. On the goal line, Uruguay is -115 (risking $115 to profit $100) compared with Portugal at -105. The goal line play is a less risky option in a game that's projected to be low-scoring (the over/under line was set at two goals), but the three-way bet is too enticing to pass up altogether.

The play: Two units on Uruguay to win outright (-115), one unit on Uruguay to win in regulation (+175).

Defending champ Germany stunningly bounced from World Cup

A monumental, drama-packed upset.

That's the best way to describe South Korea scoring a 2-0 victory over Germany to eliminate the defending World Cup champion in shocking fashion Wednesday, marking the first time since 1938 that Germany has failed to qualify for the next round of the World Cup.

After battling to a scoreless match through 91 minutes, South Korean defender Kim Young-Gwon scored a 92nd-minute goal, which was officially called with the help of VAR (video assisted referee), to give his team the 1-0 lead.

Forward Son Heung-Min caught Germany's star goalkeeper Manuel Neuer slipping and attacking, completely out of position, as he scored on an empty net four minutes later to the shame of the defending champion. That cemented the shocking 2-0 win.

Germany's Mats Hummels and teammate Mario Gomez stand stunned on Wednesday in Kazan, Russia. GETTY IMAGES

If Son's name sounds familiar it's because entering the match, he was playing without its captain, Ki Sung-Yueng, who was ruled out of action due to a calf injury.

"There is a 1 percent chance, there is hope," Son said during a press conference Tuesday, as reported by Reuters. "It's a fact, we cannot deny, Germany are much stronger than us but we have to have a mindset that we can do it. I believe we can do it."

Added South Korean coach Shin Tae-Yong on Tuesday: "To be honest, Germany are a lot stronger than us and it won't be easy. But the ball is round, anything can happen, and I believe there will be chances for us."

With the loss, Germany also became the fourth defending champion in the last five World Cup tournaments to be eliminated in group play.

HANLEY IS NO LONGER SOX' PROBLEM

OPINION

DANNY PICARD
@DannyPicard

The rise and fall of Hanley Ramirez was swift to say the least. GETTY IMAGES

So let me get this straight. Either Hanley Ramirez is dealing crack, or he's not. Did I get that right?

Seems like a pretty vague assessment of the guy's current status. But that's the result of the questionable evidence in front of us. Either he's involved in something shady, or he's not.

Whatever it is, one thing we know for sure is that Ramirez is no longer the Boston Red Sox' problem.

According to the latest report from The Boston Globe, Massachusetts State Police pulled over and later arrested a man who was in possession of two kilograms of fentanyl. The original report from radio host Michele McPhee claimed that the man was in possession of 435 grams of both fentanyl and crack cocaine.

When the police pulled him over in April, the man said the box that contained the drugs belonged to Ramirez, and initially refused to let them open it. After then Facetiming with Ramirez, the police were given the OK to see what was inside. That's when they discovered the drugs.

Ramirez denied knowing about the box, but clearly was a friend of the man who was in possession of it. And the friend's attorney later claimed that he only dropped Ramirez' name in order to avoid punishment.

The man has since pleaded not guilty to an indictment charging him with possession with intent to distribute 400 or more grams of fentanyl.

Ramirez has since been released by the Red Sox, for what the team continues to call "baseball reasons."

Let's break it down this way. Ramirez' acquaintaince was clearly intending to sell these drugs. Was he intending to sell them to Ramirez? Was Ramirez helping him to sell them? Did Ramirez have absolutely nothing to do with the drugs?

I don't think anybody knows the answers to those questions. So, we have to go with what we do know. What we know is that Ramirez was released after hitting .163 in the month of May. We know that Ramirez has still not signed with another team. We know that he claimed on twitter this week that it's been his choice not to play and instead he wanted to go home and be with his family.

Like I've already said, we know that he is no longer the Red Sox' problem.

So as you try to come up with the answers as to what is actually going on with Ramirez, off the field, just know that the Red Sox don't owe you anything when it comes to an "explanation" as to why they actually released Ramirez.

Let's just say they knew about Ramirez' association with a guy who was carrying around multiple kilos of fentanyl, with the obvious purpose of distribution. Let's say that knowledge made it much easier to cut ties with a guy who was hitting .163 in May and who was on pace to make enough plate appearances to have his 2019 $22 million vesting option picked up. Let's say the Red Sox released Ramirez for more than just baseball reasons.

Why do they have to tell you? Because now the news is that Ramirez is not under any type of investigation. So had the Red Sox come out and publicly admitted knowledge of a story linking Ramirez to a potential drug dealer, then that would be looked at as an accusation, and a pretty strong accusation to say the least.

So, instead of being stupid, the Red Sox keep citing "baseball reasons" as to why they sent him packing.

True or not, they don't owe us any more than that.

Showdown in the Bronx

It seems as though we are about to enter the next great era of the Red Sox - Yankees rivalry as the two teams have the best two records in the sport as we get set to enter July.
